From Student to Air Export Specialist : Warote Promrit

Warote Promrit, nicknamed Yod, is a proud graduate of the International Business and Logistics (ITBL) program, Class 03. In this interview, he shares how his experience at the International College shaped his professional skills, global mindset, and career path in the international logistics industry.

Building on the strong academic foundation gained from the ITBL program, Warote Promrit consistently applies both theoretical knowledge and practical skills in his role as a Professional Specialist in Air Export. His responsibilities—ranging from managing export documentation and ensuring compliance with international trade regulations to coordinating time-sensitive global shipments—reflect the direct relevance of his education. This integration of academic training and professional practice is particularly evident in real-world scenarios, where the competencies developed during his studies enable him to make informed decisions, address operational challenges, and deliver effective solutions for clients.

“Working as a Professional Air Export Specialist, the ITBL program provided me with a strong foundation that directly supports my responsibilities. The program covered key logistics concepts such as supply chain management, transportation modes, inventory control, and global freight operations, which has helped me understand the end-to-end export process, coordinate shipments efficiently, and communicate effectively with carriers, forwarders, and clients.

“Learning about International Trade regulations and laws, customs procedures, and free trade agreements taught me how international movements of goods are regulated. This knowledge is essential in my role, where accuracy in export documentation, customs compliance, and trade regulations is critical. The curriculum emphasized practical aspects, such as preparing commercial invoices, packing lists, certificates, and letters of credit, which help me with daily required operational tasks in air export.

“Studying in an international-oriented program, where English is the medium of instruction, improved my cross-cultural communication and English skills, which are essential when dealing with global clients. This integrated business program, covering strategy, marketing, and customer relationships, has helped me support clients, understand their needs, and ensure smooth export operations.”

Beyond technical expertise and operational decision-making, real success in international logistics also depends on the ability to work effectively across cultures. In a field where coordination involves airlines, overseas agents, and clients from diverse backgrounds, professional competence must be supported by strong communication skills and a global mindset. These cross-cultural capabilities, developed through an international learning environment, play a critical role in ensuring smooth collaboration, minimizing misunderstandings, and enhancing overall performance in a multinational workplace.

“The international mindset and cross-cultural skills I gained during my studies allow me to communicate clearly, build strong relationships with global partners, avoid misunderstandings, and work effectively in Germany’s multicultural logistics environment. This directly improves my coordination with airlines, overseas agents, and international customers in daily air export operations.”

Taken together, his experiences form a strong foundation for professional life in an increasingly globalized workforce. The combination of international exposure, practical industry knowledge, and essential professional skills has not only prepared him for the demands of the logistics sector but also shaped his confidence and career outlook. With this perspective, his reflections extend beyond personal experience, offering meaningful insight and guidance to those who are considering or currently pursuing their studies at the International College.

“If you want a degree that truly prepares you for a global career, the International College, KMUTNB, is the place to be. You gain real industry knowledge, international communication skills, and a global mindset that employers genuinely value. It doesn’t just teach you. It transforms you into someone ready to succeed anywhere in the world.”
